David Greenstein offers the first examination of the “walking on the road” motif in The Zohar. He argues that the kabbalists believed that ultimately Ein Sof is beyond expression or understanding, the contemplation of God’s presence in all things causes our thoughts to be purified. According to this work, the light of God must be concealed in order to be revealed to creation. Even though the kabbalists believe that ultimately Ein Sof is beyond expression or understanding, the contemplation of God’s presence in all things causes our thoughts to be purified.

The Zohar has yet to pay attention to its most unique literary device—the presentation of its insights while its teachers taller. In these pages, rabbi and scholar David Greenstein offers the first examination of the “walking on the road” motif in The Zohar. Among the many helpful projects dealt with in the companion volume to The Science of Kabbalah, readers are introduced to the “language of text and brachot,” without which the stories in The Zohar are mere fable and legend.
