Gendering The City: Women, Boundaries, and Visions of Urban Life

Gendering The City: Women, Boundaries, and Visions of Urban Life is the concept of boundary. The editors, Kristine B. Miranne and Alma H. Young, think of "boundaries in space and place [as] inseparable from social boundaries—boundaries that we define to be the formations of identity and the production of social reality." The book represents a contemporary collection of essays that examine a diversity of women’s experiences while successfully adhering to the main theme of visible and invisible boundaries. The political positioning of the book both deconstructs the silencing of women and provides refreshing innovative ways of rethinking spatial knowledges of the urban environment.
