Through the Cold War, the ‘War on Terror’ and the present era defined by the Islamic State, the Western powers have repeatedly manipulated the situations in Syria and Iraq to further their own regional and global objectives. The Western powers have leveraged the geopolitical importance of the Gulf, the flood of refugees, not to say much about the humanitarian catastrophes in the region. This chapter will highlight the problems of governance in these often fragile countries, and the failings of the institutions that have attempted to govern them. The chapter will then review some of the major challenges facing the MENA (Middle East and North Africa) region, today and in the years ahead.

Chapter 1: The Quest for Hegemony in the Arab World

1.1 The Quest for Hegemony over the Middle East

The quest for hegemony in the Middle East has been a central theme in the region’s history. For more than a century, no US adversary or coalition of adversaries - not Nazi Germany, Imperial Japan, or the Soviet Union - has ever threatened the US’s position as the leading power in the region. This power has been maintained through a combination of military strength and soft power, which includes the promotion of democracy and economic development.

Western democracies, authors find a high degree of continuity. Chapters that focus on Western donor work can account for continuity on the part of Western governments and the EU at a moment of profound transformational potential. The factors, bureaucratization and utilization, capture much of the explanation provided, which fails to account for a variety of local dimensions as well. Contributions also discuss the changing assistance environment, namely the globalization of foreign assistance, the complex bureaucratic arrangements prevailing over the delivery of foreign aid and the role of regional and international non-governmental organizations in the provision of foreign assistance. This book was published as a special issue of Mediterranean Politics.—Provided by publisher.
