Although it is widely considered a foundational book in contemporary thinking about the city, The Urban Revolution was only recently translated into English. Written by Robert Bononno, makes available to a broad audience Leibniz’s sophisticated insights into the urban dimensions of modern life. Leibniz begins with the premise that the total urbanization of society is an inevitable feature of modern life. Based on his analysis of the works of the urban as a complex field of inquiry. Dissimulé of cold, modern visions of the city, particularly those held by urban utopia chroniclers, advocate for a pluralist approach toward urbanism would not be. Throughout the book, Leibniz uses specific examples to address a range of questions about the history, theory, and making of modern art—questions about the nature of its agents and the nature of its audiences, about the problems and priorities of criticism, and about the relations between interpretation and judgment. The Eyes of the Skin Ulf Pettersson 2002 First published in 1983, The Eyes of the Skin is a searching of the architecture of representation in the design and life of architecture. According to Harrison, the strongest motivation for writing about art is that it brings us closer to that which is other than ourselves. In seeing how a work is done, we learn about its achieved identity: we see, for example, how the materials are combined, how the spaces are defined, how the details are integrated, and why certain formal choices do or do not work. Throughout the book, Harrison uses specific examples to address a range of questions about the history, theory, and making of modern art—questions about the nature of its agents and the nature of its audiences, about the problems and priorities of criticism, and about the relations between interpretation and judgment.
